Just Another Flight

Read the following passage and answer the question.

"On behalf of LunarWest Space Lines, I'd like to welcome you to Flight 203, our nonstop service to the moon. My name is Jonathan and I'm your senior flight attendant today. My goal is to make sure you have a safe and comfortable lunar experience. For our entertainment today--"

Carrie put her virtual reality goggles back on, tuning out the attendant. She had heard this banter before. Ever since her mother took the supervisor's job at the moon's polar resort, Carrie had tried to visit her at least once a month. The new hyperdrive space shuttles made it a breeze. "As easy as a drive to the corner store," Carrie's grandfather liked to say.

"Sure, Pops," Carrie always agreed--though she wasn't positive what a corner store was. She purchased everything she needed by computer. So did everybody else these days. All Carrie had to do was step into the virtual catalogs. She could try on clothes, taste food, feel the bed at a hotel. She just needed her goggles, and enough Geocredits to buy what she wanted.

"Why are they called Geocredits?" Carrie once asked her grandfather.

"Named for George Washington," Pops had explained. "You've heard of him, I hope?"

"Yes, we have a course in ancient history in school."

"Then you know he was the first president. And his picture was on the dollar bill."

Three radio button options are provided: "gadgets", "merchandise", and "services". The "merchandise" option is selected and highlighted in red.

The right column shows a preview of a text excerpt titled "No Sight of Shore". The text describes the discovery of ancient ships in the Mediterranean Sea and the experience of a sailor named Marcus. The excerpt is partially obscured by a vertical scrollbar on the right.

At the bottom of the interface, there is a "Jump to a question..." dropdown menu, a "Pause Test" button, a "Back" button, and a "Finish Test" button.

After clicking the “Finish Test” button a Test Summary screen will appear. This screen provides you with details of the number of questions you have answered. Also, if you decide that you want to review your answers you can select the “ Back” button.

If you decide that you are finished at this point, Click the Save and Exit Test button. The test will be graded and submitted for scoring. You will not be able to access the test again.

When you have exited, please close your Internet Browser and return to the school’s home screen. Do not open any other internet sites or computer applications at any time during this test administration.
